A new kind of partnering that can benefit both nonprofit entities and for-profits is beginning to take off. The concept provides a way to tap the scale of investment and the depth of investment data available in the for-profit world while applying 50 percent and more of the returns to helping underserved communities. Because the model takes a different direction from the more familiar community development financial institutions (CDFIs), community development corporations (CDCs), and community development entities (CDEs), a new term has been coined—the community investment enterprise.

A New Model

A community investment enterprise (CIE) is a for-profit business that is majority owned by nonprofits that focus on economically underserved communities. For certain investors—for example, large state pension funds—which require the scale and professionalism of an experienced intermediary but also want to serve a social good with some of their investment portfolio, the CIE fills a need.

In one example, the founders of Connecticut-based AltruShare Securities gave two-thirds ownership of the firm to two nonprofit foundations, a gift that was completed in 2006. The nonprofits, Tides Foundation and Underdog Foundation, are known for their solid community development background.

AltruShare is a financial-services firm, but a CIE partnership can involve any for-profit business that donates the majority

by Peter Drasher
AltruShare Securities LLC
Beyond Debt Financing

Wall Street’s traditional expertise is research, which is used to deploy assets in the most effective manner possible. One of the first pieces of research that AltruShare sponsored was a review of 10 years of community-investment trends.

Previous studies had shown that banks, credit unions, and loan funds provided 96 percent of funding for community investment. The AltruShare report demonstrated that the majority of financing for community investment has been overwhelmingly debt financing. It also identified the roles and types of institutions then involved in community investment, including CDFIs, CDCs, and CDEs. For-profits that donate more than half their ownership to nonprofits clearly signified something new, which is why the term CIE was adopted.

As an institutional brokerage firm, the CIE AltruShare counts among its clients state pension plans, traditional investment managers, and hedge funds. It features traditional Wall Street technology and talent, but in offering the additional by-product of support for underserved communities, it also fills a gap. After all, many asset owners and managers have been looking for a sound way to invest in communities.

AltruShare aims to expand community investment options. Until now, the overwhelming majority of investments have been in real estate efforts such as low-income housing. But although housing is important, it is by no means the only solution to improving the lives of residents in low-income areas. Some residents are equally in need of education or employment, and their small businesses need access to financial advice and mentoring support. (See “Rolling Up Sleeves.”) The CIE aims to be part of the process of expanding the scope of community investment beyond real estate and debt.

Looking Ahead

The AltruShare brokers and their partners want to see emerging domestic markets become an asset class—just as emerging foreign markets are today—and they believe that to make that happen, they must first expand the scope of investment options in underserved communities. New vehicles are needed: pension plans cannot be asked to invest in notes at below market-rates.

The ultimate goal is economic opportunity. By combining the experience of nonprofits with the efficiencies of for-profits, the CIE model gives the private sector a chance to help solve the challenges of low-income communities. The more that nonprofits can work with for-profit businesses to supplement their fund-raising and other sources of income, the more they can benefit the people and communities they serve.

Peter Drasher is managing partner at AltruShare Securities LLC, based in Bridgeport, Connecticut.

Endnotes

1 A member of the National Association of Securities Dealers since February 2006, the firm aims to leverage the traditional strengths of Wall Street to help underserved communities. It offers institutional brokerage services to public and corporate plan sponsors, foundations, endowments, and the institutional money-management community.

2 The Tides Foundation is based in San Francisco. See http://www.tides.org. Since 1976, Tides has offered donors and institutions donor-advised funds, philanthropic advice, and management services for progressive social-change philanthropy. The Underdog Foundation is the nonprofit arm of Underdog Ventures LLC, Island Pond, Vermont. See http://www.underdogventures.com/foundation.html. The foundation supports nonprofit community and environmental organizations through its grant making, community investment, technical assistance, and strategic partnerships—both nonprofit and for-profit. In particular, it uses an array of investment models to provide capital to communities and organizations that have been excluded from access to capital.

4 Another example of a CIE is Community Sign Language Service (CSLS), a for-profit business owned by the Bridgeport, Connecticut-based nonprofit group FSW Connections (Family Services Working) which collaborates with members of the Connecticut Hospital Association to ensure that deaf and hard-of-hearing patients and their families have communication access to all hospital services. Profits from CSLS are used to support other deaf outreach services to low-income, handicapped people from multicultural backgrounds who cannot pay for the cost of needed social and behavioral health services.

This Communities & Banking article is copyrighted by the Federal Reserve Bank of Boston. The views expressed are not necessarily those of the Bank or the Federal Reserve System. Copies of articles may be downloaded without cost at www.bos.frb.org/commoder/cbb/index.htm.